EASTER SUNDAY
MARCH 31

Please join us at 9am in-person or on YouTube as we celebrate!

I was sitting in a small diner that was busy in a small-town way, enjoying a good omelet and toast. The table next to us, pretty close to accommodate as many seats as possible, had some older gentlemen drinking coffee and eating some cinnamon rolls. They were obviously regulars and knew each other well. They bantered back and forth; jokes told a few times but getting a laugh anyway and the regular talk of weather, crops, and politics. I wasn't eavesdropping, they weren't trying to muffle their conversation.

As I listened, I wondered if this conversation could be had with a random group of people or even a group of friends. While they enjoyed the challenge of differing viewpoints and kept the talk genial, I thought about how conversations today devolve into such anger and how we see news companies reporting violence and evil. There have always been differences of opinion, but it feels so much more intense today. Maybe we see that rise in anger within ourselves sometimes.

When we take a bedrock stance on something in our work, personal, or family life we risk missing some good points of conversation at least. At most, we risk the relationships of family and friends that may never recover. Those bedrock beliefs are usually founded on some unconscious bias we have. Unconscious bias is not conscious bias which has taken on some negative connotations today, and not all our biases are bad or wrong. We have developed our unconscious biases as ways to protect ourselves, as shortcuts for our brains to make faster decisions. Those brain connections develop from a lifetime of cataloging our personal experiences and did they do us well or did they harm us somehow?

Our unconscious bias can sneak up on us. Most of the time we don't recognize we are making decisions, driving our conversations from a bias and that is where we miss opportunities to move forward, to make decisions that are accommodating for all, and to deal from a "win-win" attitude rather than an "I win – you lose" attitude. When there has to be a loser it stands to reason there are going to be hurt feelings, and resentment, and fear ... and we hide these reactions behind anger. Anger seems to be ok with society now. Does a social opinion cause you doubt or concern? Do political opinions cause misunderstandings or even fear? These are hard for many of us to discuss or even admit to having. When things get hard it is easy for a bias to devolve into anger. Anger is ok. Anger is one of the first things we learn as children. Is a baby hungry? Do they need a diaper change? Are they long overdue for a nap? All basic needs and a baby learns early to voice their displeasure, their needs, in anger.

Where did the art of conversation and debate fade from our society? Can two people, two political parties, two religions sit together and talk about what is important to them? If we could recognize our bias and let each other talk and really listen I think we would be so much better friends, neighbors, and even better enemies. We can't always agree with another person's ideas, and we shouldn't. Your ethics, your fidelity, and your integrity are important. We can still listen because it is important to another person. Maybe, if each person set their mind to take time to listen to the other without anger first, we could solve a few problems together. Maybe if we understood our unconscious bias first, we could guide ourselves to be better listeners, better conversationalists, and better people. Do you think leaving a meeting, a family gathering, or a table in a little diner in a small town in Nebraska with everyone knowing how you feel and what you think and that it is ok if they disagree, is still a good conversation and a good time? Most of us would agree, I think.

Making personal change is hard to do. Google says 30 to 60 days of concentrated effort to change a habit. Good conversation is an art. Like anything we do well it takes some practice and effort to accomplish. Listening is a big part of conversation. A wise person once said, "you have two ears and one mouth – probably means you should listen twice as much as you talk!" Anger only hides misunderstanding. Anger tries to cover up our fears. Anger is not a bridge to understanding. It is the start of a new year, and it can be a start for all of us to challenge ourselves to recognize our biases and relate to each other, not from the anger that tries to disguise misunderstanding and fear but from a point of interest in another person. Let us focus on the love and grace shared by our Savior as we share that love and grace with everyone we meet.

GO AND...

Have THE Conversation

"Dusty Hearts" By Deacon Timothy Siburg

"Remember that you are dust, and to dust you shall return."

Tomorrow, we turn our calendars and attention to the beginning of Lent. And for the second time in six years, we do so on a day with dual meaning. Not only is tomorrow Ash Wednesday, it is also Valentine's Day. What an odd, yet perfect pairing.

On the one hand, we have a day that at its focus is all about God's promises that are true even as we face the reality of our own mortality and the very reality of our need for God's love and grace. Through this, begins our Lenten journey. Which this year in the Nebraska Synod will be one of intention, to Go and Have the Conversation and Go and Be Intentional.

On the other hand, we have a day set aside each year on February 14th that is all about love. This is not just a day for the greeting card industry, for chocolatiers, florists, or jewelers (though all are good vocations). But this is a day truly about love and a reminder that true love often involves sacrifice, compromise, and moving beyond oneself.

A Story from Last Month

I'm thinking about this duality this year especially because of an experience that my family had last month. Early in the morning, amid the cold snap we had in January, my wife and I were awakened by an alarm. Our carbon monoxide alarm in our kitchen was going off. I quickly ran downstairs and turned our fireplace off. The alarm stopped...for thirty seconds. Then it was going again and the number on the alarm was reading somewhat high. So, without a second thought we grabbed our two young daughters who were awakened by the beeping too and got them in our car and drove it out of our garage.

We live in a parsonage across from the church where my wife serves as pastor. So we parked by the church with the heat on, grateful to be okay but worried about what might have been. We called 9-1-1, the emergency line of our local gas company, and had a number of church people on the phone too.

After a little while, the Rural Fire Department and the Gas Company person on call arrived. They were very thorough. They checked every vent, nook, and cranny. After an hour of hunting and searching, they said, "we're still getting pretty high and dangerous readings in your bedrooms." My heart sank. "Wow, I thought." "Thank you, God, for waking us up. Thank you, God, for a working alarm. Thank you, God, for what might have been, was not..." Maybe you can relate to that feeling?

The search continued and after a while they traced the problem to our furnace. I ultimately would have about five minutes to go in and grab some extra clothes, but then we would need to leave for the night until the furnace people could come and open it up. So I collected what I could in a laundry basket for the four of us. The bare essentials really. And off we were. Thanking God for each other, and the fact that my parents moved from Washington state to nearby us in Nebraska a few years ago. We had a warm place to go close by on such a cold early morning.

The next day the furnace company came. Sure enough. There was a lot of carbon monoxide in the broken furnace, the result of a cracked pipe and a broken system that would need to be replaced. They said, "thank you for having a working alarm and for making sure it was in good working order."

It felt a little strange to hear a thank you for that. But I am thankful. The moment that alarm went off, it was immediate. There was no time to think "well, maybe it's just the batteries?" Or immediately, "well, maybe if we just open a window?" No. We trusted our gut, and immediately got out of the house. It was the right call. The firefighters, the gas company employee, and the furnace company all said the same thing. We did the right things, and because of it, we're okay.

Go And...

I have been thinking about this experience a lot lately. If I'm being honest, sleep has been a bit harder to come by. As a young dad, it's been more common than not to seemingly sleep with one eye open. But I am okay with that. I'm just grateful that we're still here. Knowing that mortality is real, and knowing how close it could have been last month. Knowing, that God's love is real amid it all, and that same love is the love that makes sleeping with one eye opened occasionally okay, because that's another sign of love- for family, loved ones, and neighbors. And it's that same love too which gives me pause and reminds me to hold my loved ones just a little closer in a deep embrace. Grateful for the gift of the moment.

I wonder,

- How will you Go and Have a conversation this Lenten season?
- What conversation will you have?
- How will you Go and Be Intentional as you Journey through these great forty days?
- How will you walk through the day tomorrow, a day mixed with Valentines and Ashes, a day of "dusty hearts"?

As I look to tomorrow, grateful for love and honest about the questions of mortality we all must face, I am resolved to "Go and Have the Conversation." The conversation about life and death, and mortality with friends and loved ones, one that all of humanity tries to avoid. And I encourage you to have that conversation too. Maybe an easier starting place might be to "Go and Have the Conversation" about the importance of working carbon monoxide and smoke detectors? Because that's real too.

I am also resolved to "Go and Be Intentional" this Lenten Season. To be fully present, honest about where I am and to be open to whatever questions and emotions arise. As Valentine's Day with all its candy and hearts, turns to the evening of Ash Wednesday, I will look out from the organ bench, to watch as my wife puts the ashen cross on our daughters' heads again this year.

I know that a tear will likely come down my face because it does every year. But this year it won't just be a tear of sadness and love reminding me that my own daughters won't live forever, it will also be a tear of gratitude. It will come with the reminder that as "we are dust, and to dust we shall return," we are God's, and God holds us always in God's own deep, abiding, and abundant love. A promise that seems even more real this year for me because of the experience of the past month.

About the Author:

Deacon Timothy Siburg serves as the Director for Evangelical Mission, Innovation, and Stewardship of the Nebraska Synod, ELCA. When not out and about in the Nebraska Synod on a given Sunday, he can be found at home at Salem Lutheran Church in Fontanelle, Nebraska serving as organist, pianist, and choir director and serving alongside his wife, the Rev. Allison Siburg in leading worship. Together they have two young daughters who fill life with joy, humor, and constant surprises.

Resources:

Conversation is an exchange involving active listening as well as taking turns sharing ideas and stories. It can be easy for us to fall into monologuing, lecturing, or tuning out especially when we think we know the answers. As a result, we often avoid having difficult conversations. Faith-filled disciples are called to be honest and engage with each other in Christ-like love.

Questions to consider:

What is your prayer as you consider engaging in a hard conversation?

When was a time you had a hard conversation? What did it feel like? What did you learn from it?

What is The conversation that you need to GO have and with whom?

Prayer: Engaging God, who is not afraid of any conversation, give me the words, wisdom, and heart to join in difficult conversations. Amen.

Suggested Song: Canticle of the Turning (ELW 723)
